

Dr. Tatiana Rotondaro

Tatiana Rotondaro is currently Assistant Professor of Sociology at the Department of Economics (FEA) and at the Graduate Program of Environmental Science (PROCAM / IEE), both at the University of São Paulo (USP). A former Assistant Professor of Sociology at Fluminense Federal University (UFF), from 2009 to 2014, and Vice Coordinator of the Graduate Program of Sociology at UFF, from 2010 to 2013; and Assistant Professor of Sociology at Catholic University of Campinas (PUC/CAMP), from 2008 to 2009. She is Graduate in Sociology and Political Science at University of Campinas (UNICAMP), Master in Sociology also at UNICAMP and PhD in Sociology at University Research Institute from Rio de Janeiro (IUPERJ), with a period at Exeter University - Genomics Center Society (Egenis). She participates as Collaborating Researcher in the GovAmb – Laboratory of Environmental Governance (USP) and in the Nucleus of Social Theory and Latin America of IESP (NETSAL). She works in Sociology, with emphasis on Social Theory; Sociology of Science, Technology and Innovation (new technologies); Environmental Sociology and Economic Sociology.